

Whirlwind Missions

Letters from the Mission Field February 2018

Hello you beauty! Hope you're doing great!

The other day at Plaza Fiesta Dad and I found some Catholic "Love Potion." It was a tall plastic bottle filled with pink liquid and wrapping the outside was a label with a little naked flying baby. Of course we had to have it and also immediately incorporate the baby into the fun!

Dad and I were with the team, doing our presentation on Catholicism. This is not your ordinary, Catholicism. This is mixed with some mountain folk/ voo do religion. So we like to show people what they're going to see before they are dropped in the middle of Little Mexico. And to get their giggles out.

Dad pulls out the bottle, "And here we have the love potion. Pour this in the four corners of your room and love will come floating in."

At this point I start making Everly fly around the room and blow kisses. She's giggling and blowing bubbles, trying to grab at peoples hair.

Everyone cracks up. How can you not love this chunky little missionary swooping through the crowd? Everly turned four months old and is loving her new role as youngest missionary.

As you may or may not know, when Penelope was born her arm was broken. It was the most traumatic moment of my life. To have my newborn taken from me and whisked away to the NICU. I still get chocked up when I think about her suffering and us feeling so useless.

Thankfully the body God designed is a miracle and she healed within a month! All that's to say that with such a terrifying birth, I opted for a controlled C-section for Everly.

Miles and I have worked very hard at paying off the $13,000 delivery bill. We've got it to $6387.42 as of January 1st. My goal this year is to completely pay off all our debt. To stop feeling overwhelmed by this looming payment.

In this month of love and giving, would you consider sending a little extra to support Everly? (Please designate Baby Fund in the memo)

Ashley, Miles,
Penelope & Everly

Everly visiting the other babies in the neighborhood.

Evie touring with the team!

Evie loves the Bengali mamas!