

Ashley's
Letter from the MISSION FIELD
February 2014

Teams! I love them. We couldn't do our mission work without them. This week we had one of my favorite teams in town from Virginia Tech.

In the mornings Dad and I enjoy briefing everyone. We get them pumped up about missions, explain the different cultures, and have a show and tell time. Dad calls it our "horse and pony show."

After all the laughs, Dad settles everyone down and we go into our inside worlds. This is our prayer time.

Dad has each one of us think of somebody we know is not a Christian. We focus on that individual. We pray for them. We become sensitive to their needs. We commit to praying for them everyday until they ask us a question of a spiritual nature.

With our eyes closed and our minds focused on this friend, Dad says, "And don't be surprised if you get a phone call from that person today..."

About a week later we get an email from one of the team leaders,

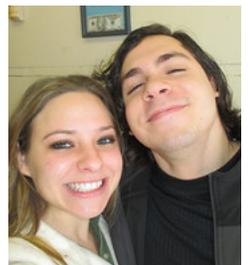

"I wanted to tell you that the prayer exercises you had us do were awesome. My best friend since 4th grade is a nonbeliever, so I was faithfully praying for her every morning. She emailed me the first day of our time with you guys just telling me about how while she doesn't believe Jesus all the way, she sees Him in the way I love her. So thank you very much!"

Amen! Isn't it encouraging to see God still at work in the lives of those we love?

Please, continue to pray for your lost loved ones. God is still in the miracle working business. And don't be surprised if you get a call from them today...

Briefing the teams on how to round up the mission kids.

Show and Tell time about Islam.

A huge THANK YOU to the team for painting the mission. It looks SO much better. I can actually see an improvement in the kids behavior when the mission looks well cared for.
